A day worth remembering

BY SABEEN AHMAD Didsbury Review

Hundreds of people were expected to attend today's Remembrance Day service at the Didsbury Memorial Complex to pay their respects to those who served in wars and are still serving overseas today.

Every year on November 11, Didsburians join their fellow Canadians to pause in a silent moment of remembrance for those who fought for Canada in the First World War (1914-1918), the Second World War (1939-1945), and the Korean War (1950-1953), as well as those who have served since then as those who have served since then.

More than 1,500,000 Canadians have served Canada in this way, and more than 100,000 have died. This year marks the 90th anniversary of the end of the First World War.

The names of at least 14 former Didsbury residents who fought in the First World War were displayed at the Alberta Legislature in a special tribute called Vigil

"Whether having served during the First or Second World Wars, Korea, United Nations missions or more recently on coalition operations such as Afghanistan, the sacrifices made by the brave men and women of Canada's armed forces should not be taken for grant-ed," said Hon. Ken Kowalski, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly. "Join me in taking time to remember those who have laid down their lives on our behalf."

All municipal, provincial and federal offices were closed today and Canadian flags lowered. Many busiresses were also closed.

While Westglen, Ross Ford, and the Didsbury High School were also closed today in remembrance, all three schools held Remembrance Day services on Veteran Gary Bogner was one of the men honoured at all three services on Friday.

As a veteran, Remembrance Day "(means)everything because I was in it...so you can imagine how much and what it means to me."

The services included slide show presentations with pictures from the past and present wars as well as songs sung by school choirs and played by the school bands. 'In Flanders Fields' - the well-known poem written by Lieutenant Colonel John McCrae - was recited at all three schools as those in attendance joined in with the students.

Ross Ford Elementary Grade 4 class displayed art-work consisting of 90 enlarged squares put together to display a reproduction of flight Lieutenant Paul Alexander Goranson's oil on canvas entitled "Royal Canadian Air Force Briefing Before Kiska."

At Westglen Middle School, Captain Patrick Scott of the 41st Brigade Headquarters in CFB Calgary, talked about his time served in Croatia aided with a slide show so those in attendance could get a glimpse of what he saw first hand while serving.

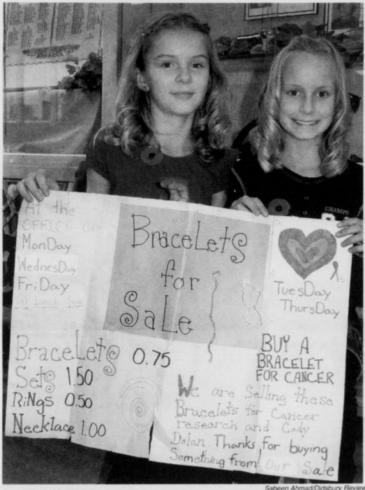

Didsbury High School's services were emceed by 16-year old Braden Smith who began the services by talking of his hero, his grandfather Charlie Snyder who served in the Second World War.

Fundraising ongoing for child diagnosed with rare cancer

BY SABEEN AHMAD

Didsbury Revie

Westglen Middle School along with friends and family of a 12-year-old Didsbury boy struck with a rare form of bone cancer are getting prepared for a fundraiser they have arranged for Cody Dolan and his family on November 16.

"We have got some great items for the silent auction," says Kathy Connolly, a friend of the Dolan family and one of the organizers of the event. "It will be fun for both kids and adults."

In August, Dolan was diagnosed with a rare form of bone cancer in his leg. The 12-year-old has been in the hospital in Calgary since then and his mother had to stop working in order to stay by her son's side. Seeing the circum-stances, Connolly and othdecided that they should do something to help the family

Dolan's school, where his twin brother, Brendan, also attends, decided to get involved as well.

"We thought that we should help out one of our own," says principal Jeff Thompson.

The school has been active in raising money and collecting items for the silent auction that will be at the fundraiser. total the school has collected over $700.

"We held a hotdog sale, where AG Foods donated the hotdogs and buns," says Thompson, adding the event raised over $400.

The whole community has jumped in with both feet...we've got a pretty neat special place here," said Thompson with a smile. "A large number (of the Grade 8s) will be involved with the special event on the 16th."

Along with the hot dog sale, some students at Westglen decided to raise money

Mytayla Miller and Kailyn Bell, both 10 years old, have been selling bracelets hand made of string braided, twisted and knotted by themselves to raise money for Dolan.

"The whole community has jumped in with both feet...we've got a pretty neat special place here."

JEFF THOMPSON Westglen principal

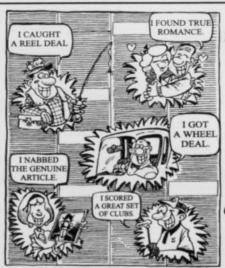

"One day together and we just decided maybe we should do this bracelet thing and then later we were like, you know what, there's a boy at our school that has cancer so maybe we should sell them and raise money for his fundraiser," said Miller, both adding that they did not personally know Dolan.

The girls expanded selling their bracelets to full sets consisting of rings and necklaces. They have been selling their jewelry at school and on the bus for seventy-five cents. In total the girls have raised close to $300. "Our parents (and others) have also just kind of given us money too," said Bell.

The girls sent a specially made bracelet just for Dolan, made of his favourite colour green and hope to continue raising money straight up until the day of the fundraiser.

Events are set to begin at 2 p.m. on Sunday and will go to 6 p.m. Connolly mentioned at the event a webcam will also be set up for Dolan to be able to participate and see the events and for the stu-dents to be able to interact with him.

Moose on the loose causing safety concerns

BY SABEEN AHMAD

Didsbury Review

Police are warning Didsbury residents to keep an eye out for moose that have been spotted in town—and to stay away from them.

"We've gotten reports of kids running around them and adults trying to take pictures up close," says Sgt. Kevin O'Dwyer. "The moose will hurt them if it gets upset," he warned.

A moose and its offspring have been seen in Didsbury over the past three years. O'Dwyer believes they come into town close to winter to feed off the shrubs and trees. Recently, O'Dwyer said the moose have been spotted sleeping in open parking lots that have shrubs around them

O'Dwyer said RCMP are doing everything they can to move the moose out of town.

"We are working with fish and wildlife...and using sirens and rubber bullets...anything to make the area unpleasant for them."

O'Dwyer emphasized that if anyone spots the two moose to call police and to stay away from them. "When you figure that the mom is over 1,000 pounds...if she hits you, you're going down."

Although they may be using rubber bullets, O'Dwyer said RCMP officers are not out to shoot to kill but rather trying to "antagonize them to make it an unpleasant destination...we don't want to have to kill them and I don't want anybody getting hurt."

Need for workplace safety never greater

DAN SINGLETON

In an effort to cut down on the number of young people being injured or killed at Alberta workplaces, the province has launched a new awareness campaign aimed at reminding young workers and their employers that dangers are ever-present on many jobsites.

And with more and more young people entering the workforce these days, whether on a full- or part-time basis, the need to ensure safety comes first has never been greater.

Based on extensive research and testing, the campaign focuses on 15 to 19-year-olds and emphasizes that workplace incidents can be very real with lasting conse-quences, said Hector Goudreau, Minister of Employment

Anybody who loses focus for a moment is at risk of making a mistake on the job, and our young workers heading into the work force are the most vulnerable, said Goudreau.

While many young people in the cities find work in service industries, working on farms or ranches is still the most common job in Alberta's rural communities.

In fact rural young people have always found jobs on area farms, learning the agriculture trade from an early age and eventually becoming the leaders of this vital industry

Yet as anyone who has ever worked on a farm can tell you, the hazards associated with farm machinery, livestock, chemicals, and other things makes farm work a potentially very dangerous profession. As such being aware of the dangers is something young people need to know and know well.

This new youth worker safety campaign focuses on specific questions young workers should ask their employers to avoid workplace injury or death.

And the bottom line is that it's up to the employer first and foremost to make sure the young people are well informed about how to avoid incidents.

We find that every workplace incident uncovers s al unfortunate choices that were made that led to the tragedy; there are no accidents," says Dr. Michael Alpern of the Job Safety Skills Society, a member of the Young Worker Provincial Advisory Committee.

"Research shows that young workers have a higher injury rate than their workplace peers. We see it first hand and we endorse any program that might save a life or limb."

Having young workers contributing to the economic wellbeing of rural Alberta benefits everyone – and keeping those workers injury free makes that possible.

The province should be applauded for this new work-place safety campaign, making the wellbeing of Alberta's young workers a top priority.

Now it's up to employers to take the time to ensure their young workers get the message about how to iden-tify and avoid workplace hazards. It will be time well

Letter to the editor The forgotten ones

This is the time of year when we remember the ones who have fought and died for their country and our freedom.

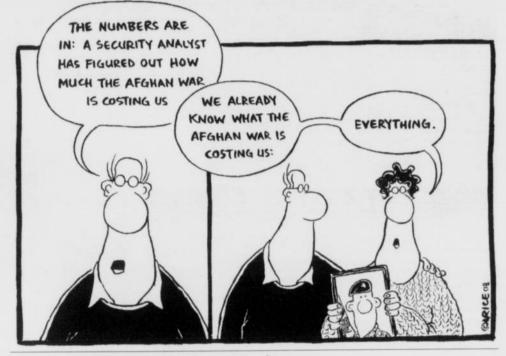

Unfortunately there are many who have not been recognized or even acknowledged. These are our First Nations veterans who also left their homes and families to defend the country in which we all live.

I would very much like to extend a heartfelt thank you to our forgotten warriors for their many sacrifices to keep us safe and free

We will remember them.

Lower pump price, different problem

HENNIG

While the recent drop in the price of natu ral gas and oil may help ease the pocketbook-pain of motorists and homeowners, it is going to inflict pain on the provincial treasury. The reason is quite simple - the lower the price of oil and natural gas, the less money the government

With petroleum prices dropping back to earth, and oil sands and upgrader projects being shelved, the provincial government could be looking at stagnant or even falling revenues for Budget 2009. While the government has no control over the world or North American prices of these commodities, it still has to deal with the consequences

Falling prices would not cause much of a problem if resource reenues were a small portion of all government revenues, but they are not. Last year, royalties from oil and gas revenues made up 29 percent of all provincial government revenues down from 32 percent the year prior and 40 percent the year prior to

To put this into context, provincial income taxes were only 22 per-cent of provincial revenues last year, 20 percent the year prior and 13 percent the year prior to that. However, the recent upward trend in these revenues has been assisted by a booming oil patch.

Beyond year-to-year bounces in revenues, oil and gas prices in the first seven months of this fiscal year have seen more volatility than an Oilers/Flames hockey game.

Oil prices hovered around $100US/barrel in April, and then shot up to just under $150US in early July, only to come crashing down to just above $60US in late October. Similarly, natural gas prices hovered around $8/GJ in early April, jumped to over $11 in mid-June, cratered to below $6 in mid-September, and have slowly climbed to around $7.

The impact of a $1/barrel decrease in the yearly average price of oil is a $130-million loss for Alberta taxpayers. For example had the government budgeted oil to be $100/barrel (as some critics demanded) when it really ended up being $70, the province would be short $3.9-billion - roughly equivalent to the entire advanced education budget for this year.

Thanks to the changes to royalty rates, next year the Alberta government will be even more susceptible if prices swing wildly. In 2009-10, a $1/barrel decrease will result in a $211-million loss. Under the above example, that means the province would be short $6.3-billion - roughly equivalent to the entire K-12 education budget for this year

And that is just oil.

A $1/GJ decrease in the price of natural gas is a $1.14-billion loss for the government this year and a $1.66-billion loss next year.

The finance minister has claimed that everything will be OK with this year's budget thanks to many months of oil and gas being priced higher than expected.

However, if resource prices con-tinue to stay low the government may not be able to maintain its tor-rid pace of spending for Budget 2009. In fact, increasing spending (without dipping into savings) may be completely out of the question next year.

A recent Ipsos-Reid poll que tioned Albertans on what they would prefer their provincial government do if revenues dip: raise taxes, cut spending or run a deficit.

Only 14 percent supported raising taxes. This is a good sign for those looking forward to the elimination of Alberta's regressive health-care premium tax on January 1st.

While running a deficit would thankfully - be illegal under provincial law, only 20 percent supported that idea anyway.

An overwhelming 73 percent of Albertans supported cutting provin-cial spending. This should be no surprise as Alberta spends, per capi-ta, by far the most in the country - so there's certainly room for cuts.

While there are many factors at play that make future revenues uncertain, what is certain is that Albertans will not accept their provincial government raising taxes running deficits. The polls say Albertans are prepared for spending cuts. Hopefully our provincial politicians are as well.

The future of Didsbury's water supply will be up for debate tomorrow as the Mountain View Regional Water Services Commission meets to possibly make two crucial decisions commission The expected to vote on whether or not Mountain View County can join the six-member committee, as well as decide if the commission should move for ward with adding an additional waterline between Olds and the Anthony Henday Water Treatment Plant.

The two topics have been the subject of much debate among commission members for some time.

The twinning of the waterline has especially been an area of concern for members since the existing single line has been struggling to meet the demands of its serviced communi-ties—hence the implementation of an outside water ing ban this summer that is still in effect. If the commission moves to twin the it will have to foot the estimated $40 million price tag until the provincial gov-ernment moves to allocate funding for the of the water commission, said that despite the province's decision, the board must make a decision soon to avoid a drastic water shortage in the com-

"We already know we're going to have to go one more year and face water shortages in the summer. If the towns keep growing at the rate they have been, those shortages are going to get high. So for us, it's very critical to move ahead," said Davidson.

The commission has been told by the province that they will still receive a grant even if they begin funding the project without the immediate support of Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation.

Davidson estimates that if construction on the line were to begin today, it could take until 2010 before the line would be in

Collision with train sends man to hospital

BY PAUL FREY

A man who was injured on Nov. 4 at an uncontrolled railway crossing on Highway 2A and Range Road 1.3, just outside of Olds is expected to make a full recovery from non-life-threatening injuries, Olds RCMP say. The 47-year-old Bowden area driver of the truck was hauling a full load of hay with a semi at about 10:15 a.m. when the vehicle was hit by a northbound train. The man was conscious and received treatment at the scene by Olds firefighters, before being transported by ground ambulance to Olds Hospital and Care Centre and then by STARS to Foothills Medical Centre.

Olds RCMP and the CP Rail police are continuing to investigate the incident

While CP Rail said the engineer of the 89-mixed car train did see the vehicle on the tracks prior to hitting it, efforts to stop the train before the collision happened were unsuccessful. It takes up to one kilometre for a loaded train to stop. Breanne Feigel, western Canada spokesperson for CP Rail, said the rural crossing at that location has no lights, warning bells or control arms. It does have a stop sign and a crossbuck, how-

Feigel said there are several factors determining the number and amount of frequency of traffic at that particular the area and sightlines for motorists to be able to see an approaching train.

All level railway crossings are regulated by Transport Canada.

"Any request for an upgrade to a crossing . . . is kind of a joint venture between Canadian Pacific Railway, working at the request of the community and then assisting the community in applying to Transport Canada for increased protec-tion if that's something that the community is in support of. The final say does come down to Transport Canada," she aid, adding that municipal and higher level government funding is also needed to pay for upgrades

Feigel said while in this particular was fortunate there fatality involved, all incidents involving trains are difficult for CP crews because of the length of time it takes for a train to stop when it's noticed there's some thing on a stretch of track

CP Rail reports all railway related incidents to authorities for statistical purposes and tries to determine the cause of the incident. Feigel said an additional of investigation is initiated if a derailment takes place.

According to statistics compiled by the Transportation Safety Board of Canada there have been 29 incidents of trains hitting objects on the track in Alberta as of September, while there has been one fatality and one serious injury rebate for the month of November, which is expected to save Albertans approximately $27 on their gas bill. The rebate is the result of the province's Natural Gas Rebate Program, which runs from October to March when 80 per cent of the total natural gas is consumed for the year.

The government triggers the rebate when two of the three regulated natural gas companies charge rates above $5.50/GJ.

Most homeowners will have the rebate applied to their monthly gas bill, while commercial and industrial consumers and those who use alternative fuels to heat their homes will have to apply for the rebate. Fuels included in the rebate include: natural gas, propane, kerosene, heating oil and in ome instances, electricity. Gas companies are regulated to charge a maximum cost of $8.75/GJ. The province's gas rebate increases as the price of Japanese team to experience Didsbury hospitality

The Town of Didsbury will be playing host to 19 hockey players from the Saitama Sakae Beavers of Japan, beginning Thursday.

"They will be here until the 25th," said minor hockey coach Jeff Chomyn. Chomyn lived in Japan 15 years and coached the hockey team for 13 years there. While coaching there he decided it would be a great learning experice for the players to come to Canada to play.

Help them get a little better...show them that there's more than just the hockey they know from growing up...the highlight of their year is coming to Canada." he said, adding that many of the players have gone on to play in pro leagues and national leagues

This year, the team is set to play in an AA tournament in Olds from November 14-16 and then will play a game in Didsbury on Monday night against the midget team.

During the day on Monday and Tuesday the team will be risiting the schools in Didsbury as well.

Chomyn has other activities planned for the team as well, including attending a Flames gam

Chomyn feels that smaller towns received the team much better than larger centres as sometimes it gets too saturated with tournaments and visiting teams.

Along with the hockey the team is able to learn more in terms of the cultural aspect Chomyn says. In Japan, the team, comprised of Grade 10-12 students, focuses mostly on hockey. "We'd have about 10 practices a week," Chomyn says of his time coaching. The students live in dormitories together and take classes together, emphasizing the team dynamic they work with on the ice as well.

Chomyn plans to continue bringing the team to Canada and hopes to eventually see it expand.

"I'd like to see it grow...on a little bit more of a competitive level," he said, adding that he would also like to see more teams come over from other countries

Colts take three of four weekend points

Stellar goaltending from Jason Arnason helped propel the Mountainview Colts to win and a tie over the weekend. Friday night in Claresholm, he stopped 38 of 42 shots to help the Colts to a 5-4 win over the Storm. Sunday afternoon in Didsbury, Arnason kicked away 39 of 41 shots in a 2-2 tie with the Cochrane Generals Five different players scored against the Storm to provide the offence for the local junior B team. Justin Zellweger, Eric Kapler, Daniel Dyck, Martin Clausen and Taylor Olsen all found the back of the net on Friday.

Sunday, Pat Turville and Dylan Perry each scored to lead the home-standing

With the win and tie the Colts move to 6-4-1 on the season good for 13 points and first place in the Prairie Division, five points up on Banff.
Overall in the Northern Conference, the Colts sit third behind Stettler and Blackfalds, one point up on fourth place Three Hills.

The schedule gets tougher this weekend as the Colts head to Stettler on Friday to take on the 7-1-0 Lightning before returning home Sunday afternoon to take on the 3-3-2-1 Red Deer Vipers. Game time is 3 p.m. at the Didsbury Recreation Complex.

Number of mischief complaints increasing

Complaints of mischief were up in the first part of the year compared to the same period last year according to the Didsbury's second quarter RCMP report.

O'Dwyer said the signs could be having quite a positive effect.
"Calls have gone down, does that mean people aren't reporting it...I like to think that we are having an effect with the signs."

He suggested that the increase of awareness could also be stopping those who are committing the mischief.
"The persons responsible are maybe finding it not as easy to get out there to perform the mischief."

Impaired driving reports have gone up

80 per cent from last year.
"I don't think people are getting the message," said O'Dwyer explaining the reason for the increase.

He added that with new members in his unit they have been out quite often in hopes of catching impaired drivers. Mobility is a good thing...they are aggressively targeting impaired driving."

Overall, O'Dwyer found the second quarter report to be very close to last year's. The only other area where he found a decrease was in false alarms. (They) cost us money, time and

BY SABEEN AHMAD

For Didsbury resident Bill Jepps, the time spent serving in the Navy during the Second World War was a positive and memorable experience.

"It was a short time," Jepps explains of his time with the Royal Canadian Navy. "I was only 17 years old and needed to get permission from my parents to be able to join."

In 1943 at the age of 17, Jepps decided to join the navy becomes a morar of this friends were injuring.

because so many of his friends were joining.

Although his father had told him that in order for him to live in his parents' house he would have to stay in school, Jepps made the decision to leave school for the navy, however, when time came to sign up at the navy recruiting office in Calgary, he was told he needed his parents' permission as "I was not yet 18 years of age.

"I went home and told my dad that next year I was going to be 18 and you won't be able to stop me," he laughs. Eventually, his parents gave him permission and he was off to one of the Calgary barracks, at the northwest corner of 7th Avenue and 3rd St. W, for training.

After a month at the barracks, Jepps was sent off where 14,000 others also were, to the Cornwallis barracks in Nova Scotia. "It was one of the biggest naval bases around."

In Cornwallis, Jepps learned a lot about torpedoes and guns in his training. Although during the training process recruits had to specialize in something, Jepps specialized in torpedoes but did not really want a specialization as he wanted to get out of training and get to sea as soon as he

After a mere month and a half at Cornwallis, Jepps was granted leave for a week where he headed to Montreal. While living in the army barracks in Montreal, Jepps and others received word that they were being drafted to Quebec City where there was a brand new warship, a frigate, that was being prepped to set sail and they were to be on it.

Jepps and his fellow seamen were sent out to sea. The ship went down the St. Lawrence River and into Glace Bay in Nova Scotia. From there they pulled into Halifax and from there the ships were sent out on workouts.

Each man was put on a crew - for Jepps it was the orlican gun crew. The ship he was on travelled to Bermuda where his ship competed with a sister ship that involved speed and shooting

"We practised shooting at airplane sleeves... airplanes pulling a sleeve way behind...and we'd practise shooting at the sleeve to see who was closest...just to see how (the orli-

While out at sea, Jepps was the first seaman on his ship to contract jaundice. "One of the others looked at me and said 'you've got jaundice'...I didn't even know what that was." Jepps explains how another seaman noticed his yellow eyes and told him to go see a doctor.

Jepps had to leave the ship and went to an English hospital where it was confirmed that he did indeed have jaundice and was told to pack his bags and head back.

Jepps was sent back to the barracks in Bermuda and from there was sent back to St. John's where his duty was to be a main guard down on the dock at the barracks - a job not many were fond of.

"Usually when you're on there...you're on there forever...it's just one of those hateful jobs."

Jepps worked on a 24-hour rotation. "Twenty-four on duty and 24 off duty."

During his time off, Jepps would head to the administration office and pester them to let him back on the ship he wanted to be on, the Glace Bay.

"I would be in there every day, until one day Glace Bay was returning and I saw it docking."

Jepps went back to the administration office and, using one of his new skills of being able to read wires upside down, noticed that a wire was on the desk stating they in need of someone to replace a position on Glace Bay.

"I went in there and the administrator looked at me and said 'oh you're back, what do you want now'...I told him I wanted to replace that position they were looking for."

He was told to go out and wait and within a matter of min-utes Jepps was handed papers to board Glace Bay.

Jepps boarded the ship with a grin and when a commander asked him what he was grinning about he responded, "You're pretty lucky to get off (main guard)."

Jepps remained on that ship until the war ended.
One of the ship's jobs was to escort convoys from Londonderry, Ireland, back to Canada. Fortunately, Jepps says, they never lost a ship while out at sea.

Jepps remembers a particularly memorable return from Londonderry.

"A lookout gave a direction that there was something floating at sea...we broke off and went in that direction and it looked to me like a landing craft." After stopping the ship, it was found that there was a living quarters on one side of it.

"They found American uniforms in there...along with all this other stuff there was a little terrier-type dog in there...in good shape.

They ended up keeping the dog on the ship with them and sunk the floating object because it was a danger to those at

Luckily, Jepps said he encountered little battlefield action. Jepps was discharged in March of 1946 and chose not to sign up for another 20 years of serving in the navy. He looks back at his time served with great memories. Though he served at such a young age, Jepps never experienced anyone picking on him, in fact, one day Jepps was even appointed cap-

"I didn't know this...but it was Christmas on the ship and it was tradition that the youngest on the boat got to be captain for the day," so Jepps was able to wear the captain's coat

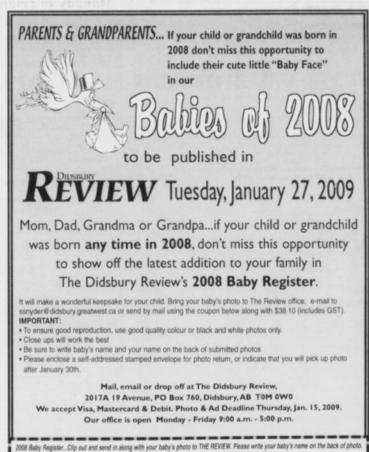

"I don't have any regrets...it was an experience that a young person would never ever have without war being called over there.

The Alberta Electric System Operator (AESO) is meeting with members of the comm feedback on the need for reinforcement of the transmission system between the Edmonton and Calgary regions. Construction of a new transmission line between the regions is being considered within the grey study area of the map. We have decided to conduct further study both east and west of the previously outlined study area. The expansion of the study area means more options can be examined. For people who attended prior Open Houses, the materials available will be the same with the exception of the additional geographic concepts east and west of the original study area. None of the concepts within the original area have been eliminated.

After receiving compreferred routing alternatives and file a Needs Identification Document with the Alberta Utilities

Didsbury's cairn dedication In their own words

Following is the text of the address given by Lt. Col. C.A. Richardson, D.S.O., at the dedication held ceremony held at Didsbury's Butte on Day, Remembrance Tuesday, November 11,

"It is a great privilege and honour to be invited here today to unveil the plaque dedicated to the men and women of Didsbury, who gave their lives in the second Great

This Cairn was built in 1931 by the Legion, with funds raised in Didsbury and district. It is indeed a lovely Cairn and stands on this height of land overlooking the town and entire district, as well it should.

The plaque honouring the dead of the first Great War was unveiled by the late Alfred Speakman, M.L.A., in August 1931, and no doubt as he stood here 16 years ago, and with many of you standing in almost the same spot as in 1931, you all heard the fervent hope expressed that the 1914-1918 war was the War to end all Wars.

Unfortunately this has not been the case, and today we are gathered here to honour the dead of two wars. Let not the memory die! Let we felcountrymen of our glorious dead remember always that but for them we would not have the privilege of living in this wonderful free country. We should think next of the next-of-kin of our fallen comrades, a group who are very often forgotten. They have also made a great sacrifice for all of us and in many cases are still making sacrifices far greater than we ever dream of. There are so many times by a little thoughtfulness that we could lend a helping hand to a mother, a wife, or a child of one of our fallen comrades, and how much it would be appreciated.

At this time we must not forget our wounded The thousands of men who are in hospitals with twisted and broken bodies, many of whom will never again enjoy one of the greatest things on earth - good health. There are so many ways in which we can make life a bit more pleasant for these unfortunate men and as we stand here reverence to our dead, let us resolve, for their sake, to do a little more for our wounded and broken men, at many times our almost forgotten heroes

I feel today we should also think of the poor souls who are attempting to live in the war ravaged countries of the world. The suffering and starvation is, I am sure, beyond our imagination and surely this will help teach the entire world the tragic lesson of war.

is a pleasure to note today that although we are unveiling a plaque on the cairn to the men and women who gave their lives in the second Great War there is also being constructed at this time another fine memorial to their memory. I speak of the skating rink that is being constructed by the citizens of Didsbury and district. This will no doubt be a place where young and old may parof the Canadian sport, namely, skating and hockey. It will be a living memorial to the men and women of Didsbury and district who paid the supreme sacri-

Before I unveil this beautiful plaque dedicated to the Men and Women of Didsbury who gave their lives in the So Great War I would ask you all to remember what these 19 men and one woman gave that they might enjoy this country of ours. They gave their all. Let us not forget that however imperfect the post war world is, we are still, thanks to our fallen, a nation of free men, not slaves

They threw us the torch be ours to hold high.

U.K. plaque erected in Carstairs pilot's name

BY MARK LAYCOCK

It was a bitterly cold Tuesday afternoon in Gateshead, U.K., on February 10, 1942. The roof of the world was tinted grey with murky clouds and the emissions from the factories below made it difficult to navigate the skies.

On this day, several aircraft from the nearby air force base, RTAF Usworth in Sunderland, England, were flying high above the frozen British landscape. Among the pilots of those aircraft was young James D'Arcy Lees Graham, a Royal Canadian Air Force pilot stationed out of Usworth

Originally from Carstairs Alta., the 24year-old had since taken flight across the Atlantic to Canada's motherland during the Second World War.

The pilot was the son of James (a First World War veteran) and Florence Graham of Carstairs. He stood five foot, 9.5 inches tall with a medium build, blue eyes and auburn hair.

Shortly before 13:00 hours, a request was sent to all aircraft to return to base due to an unexpected and dramatic turn in the weather. Graham acknowledged the request and began to head back—he never did return.

Residents of the town of High Marley Hill, a small community near the Usworth base, soon heard the roar of a singleseater Hawker Hurricane MKI passing overhead. Behind the controls was D'Arcy, who was struggling to navigate his way back to base through the thick clouds.

At 13:05 hours the sound of engines could be heard no more, as the plane had crashed near a communications tower in High Marley Hill.

High Marley Hill.

The official aircraft accident card from Usworth stated the plane "flew into high ground in a snow squall, weather deteriorated suddenly and general recall sent to all aircraft. Aircraft apparently dived out of low cloud, failed to see ground in time to pull up."

D'Arcy's death certificate stated he died of multiple injuries sustained as a result of the crash.

Nearby resident Sheila Graham, who was 13 years old at the time, came upon the wreckage shortly after the crash. Sixty-five years later, the 78-year-old would return to the spot to attend a ceremony to honour the fallen pilot.

On January 22, 2007, Graham was honoured by the residents of High Marley Hill with the unveiling of a plaque, which is now stationed at Marley Hill Community Hall. It reads: In memory of Sergeant Pilot James D'Arcy Lees Graham R77959 R.C.A.F. Killed when his Hawker Hurricane MKI P3664 from No. 55 Operational training unit R.A.F Usworth crashed in a flying accident on 10th

February 1942 near here at High Marley Hill."

In attendance for the ceremony was Colonel Daniel B. Edgar of the Royal Canadian Air Force, the mayor of Gateshead, M a u r e e n Goldsworthy, Reverend Bob Hopper and Philip Smith, an investigator into the history of the crash.

The creation of the plaque wasn't an easy project to undertake, and was ultimately the product of the tireless efforts of 36-year-old Philip, a war historian and contributor to the Air Crash Investigation and Archaeology Amateur Research group. The then postal worker from Newcastle, a city north of Marley Hill, came across the forgotten hero while carrying out research into wartime crashes.

In a July 20, 2005, letter to the Newcastle Evening Chronical he wrote, "It is my personal feeling that Sergeant J.D.L. Graham should be remembered and not forgotten, as he gave his life in the pursuit of freedom."

The newspaper later published an article in hopes that residents may have information on the crash. When the memorial was erected, he told the Evening Chronical in a January 24, 2007, article, "I've always been interested in aviation and crashed aircraft and thought it was important to have a tribute to this pilot. I am delighted it has come about."

Of course, no investigation could have been complete without looking into the history of the downed pilot. For that, Philip needed the help of the Carstairs Legion.

Philip wrote numerous letters to the legion asking for information on D'Arcy's history and relatives. These letters made their way to Bev Stevenson, secretary of the Carstairs Legion.

"I thought it was really very good of him to be going to such lengths for a Canadian. I think that's how they feel about Canadians over there because the war happened right where they live," said Stevenson.

Throughout Philip's entire investigation, he and Bev kept in close contact, constantly relaying information back and forth.

"(He was) very ambitious and he was very good and very driven and persistent, he never gave this up at all, he went to great expense to get this monument erected."

Bev notes that some residents east of Carstairs knew D'Arcy. At one point he had attended a small rural school located 24 kilometres east of Carstairs.

"He was known by the local people, he was a local child and when he died his mom and dad moved to Calgary so it was very difficult to find any information about him and most of the information that was found out was on the English side; it was Philip that was doing all the work," Bev explains.

In January 2007, Philip received a reply from Bev notifying him that some information had been found, including a physical description of D'Arcy and a classmate that went to school with D'Arcy who was sure he had a photo of the downed pilot.

The photo was never found in Carstairs, but in February of 2008, Jack Calkins, a Victoria School archivist in Edmonton, found a photo of D'Arcy and sent it to Philip.

News of the memorial made its way through various newspapers and even an aviation magazine in the U.K. The April 2007 edition of Air NORTH featured an excerpt of Philip's mission to honour Graham.

Bev said the investigation was a great experience and if she ever gets the chance, she'll drop by High Marley Hill for a first-hand look at the memorial.

His interests were many: music, gardening, golf, and carpentry. Ed was one of the original members of the Calgary barbershop singing group, the SPEBSQSA, and later in life enjoyed the music of "André Rieu". It became one of his ambitions to collect every CD. Being an entrepreneur in his younger years, he created a "man-made beach" called "Clearwater Beach" in Bragg Creek. In 1964, he moved to Cochrane to establish a farrow-to-finish swine operation named "Cloudy 7 Ranch Ltd."

In 1975, Ed and Doris moved to Didsbury and became successful land developers, creating communities and

Lost & Found

In loving memory of Jean Gooding

One lonely year has passed since you were called away,
Part of us went with you to your new home.
So many things we could have done,
Had you been left to stay. The happy hours we once enjoyed. How dear the memory still, But death has left a loneliness this world can never fill. You suffered in silence and went peacefully to rest, God only takes the best. And in God we trust and to Him we pray

Missing you and loving you always, Doug, Kathy, Dave, Ken, Bonnie, Debbie, Larry, Joan, Neville, Rick & Families
